7. Clinical and Research Interest

Palliative and end of life care for critically ill patients

Patients admitted to critical care units are increasingly of older age and suffering acute exacerbation of chronic illness. Many patients admitted to critical care units eventually die there. Many clinical, ethical and emotional challenges coming against managing the dying process well. Effective end of life care minimize the patient suffering and maximize the patient and their families quality of life. The adoption of palliative care principles is widely known to enable good death, but the practice of palliative care is underdeveloped in critical care units, as well as in wider health care settings. This reflects the situation in the Middle East where palliative care is not widely available or understood. This theme of interest focuses on improving quality of life of critically ill patients and their families through the prevention and relief of suffering by mean of early identification and impeccable assessment and treatment of pain and other physical, psychosocial and spiritual problems.

End of life communication, decision-making and advance care planning

This theme focuses on the interdisciplinary, multi-professional and family-centred end of life care communication; the role of advance care planning in end of life care; and the ethical dilemmas and their resolution in clinical practice. I am interested in examining patients' and their relatives' understandings of and preferences for end-of-life care and how they experience and understand the life prolonging new technologies; and how their social and economic resources constrain and shape their experiences. I am also interested in approaches to improve communication between clinical staff and patients' families and between different categories of professionals, as well as how best to approach education of nursing staff who care for the dying.

³ Part Time Job

Palliative care across settings

The provision palliative care for patients with life threatening illness and across healthcare settings is a healthcare priority in Middle East. This strand of interest focuses on assessing and managing palliative care needs for patients with a variety of life-threatening illness (e.g. chronic obstructive pulmonary disease, heart failure, neurological and renal diseases) and in a variety of healthcare settings (e.g. out clinics, emergencies, critical care units).
